Tour Manager

It is not a simple undertaking to coordinate precision activities such as travelling, scheduling and planning financial phases for an artist unless you are a tour manager. However, being a tour manager does not necessarily mean that everything will be in its place in the daily routine. In order to get the work done with a brilliant performance, there is a need of additional effort from the organizer (Mancini 12). I consider Michael Hesbon, a tour manager of a small scale tourism firm, to be a great example of this highly valuable occupation.

Michaels' achievements as a tour manager were easily defined by his intrinsic admirable traits and nurtured skills such as effective planning techniques. Scheduling is a key tool in ensuring success in all spheres of life. In order to plan well, time management is very critical. It gives Michael a sense of control and charge over the activities to be implemented. A successful tour manager should be able to organize the time effectively. Besides, the significance of communication cannot be underestimated in both the planning and execution levels of actions related to a tour. In my opinion, Michael Hesbon has effective communication skills, and this gives him a competitive advantage in the field of tourism. Good interpersonal experience can be considered very important in relating to other people. Moreover, travelling and coordination of activities require that social skills are impeccable in order to establish the right relationship with people (Mancini 83). This is an aspect that Michael Hesborn has emphasized on in order to make himself successful in the field of tourism. Additionally, he is very creative and inspiring which makes him versatile in even seemingly difficult environments. Being creative enables the manager to solve petty issues in the least amount of time possible, while at the same time instilling people's confidence in his work.

Michael Hesbon is also very ambitious with the zeal to outdo his best all the time. Every other trip coordinated by him is a better and an improved version of the previous one. This implies that the tour manager should be committed in his routine work and ready to improve his weaknesses in order to realize the final goals and objectives of the organization. Other inherent traits such as being hardworking, honest and trustworthy are also an important package to a good tour manager. Michael has all these qualities, and this determines him to enhance the success of his job.
